"Transition, Technology, and Community Health Workers: Bagiin Emch in Mongolia"

Speaker: Jaspal Sandhu, PhD Candidate UC Berkeley and Fulbright Fellow

December 6th, 2007, 5:00 PM Room 305, Building No.5 NUM

Bagiin emch, mid-level health professionals that work in the Mongolian countryside, are a critical part of the national health care system, providing primary care to pastoralist households that would otherwise be unable to access health services. This research is focused on developing a comprehensive understanding of information management practices of bagiin emch in order to design improved information systems to support their work. The talk will discuss key issues of a workforce in transition and how these relate to the design and use of technology. The primary fieldwork in this research consists of short-term participant observation with bagiin emch from 15 soums in 3 aimags.

Musical Event

"Alash Ensemble, Throat Singing Music of Tuva"

4-5:30pm, January 23, 2008, New England Conservatory, Boston

Admission: Free

New England Conservatory's (NEC) Intercultural Institute presents the Alash Ensemble. This Throat Singing quartet formed in 1999, is one of the most adventurous groups driving the revival of Central Asian traditions since the end of the Soviet era. The traditional techniques they learned as students of revered Tuvan masters like Kongar-ool Ondar combine with influences from elsewhere in Asia and the West to create beautiful vocal and instrumental combinations which are contemporary, but distinctly Tuvan.
